

Alannah and the Earth's Lost Song

A magical adventure about caring for our environment

AN ALANNAH DIOR LEARNING ADVENTURE

The Morning Nature Went Quiet

Alannah visited the community garden, but something was wrong. The creek only whispered. The flowers drooped. Even the birds had forgotten their tune. A tiny leaf fox named Sprig appeared beside a glowing heart-shaped seed. “Earth’s song is fading,” he said. “Kind actions can bring it back!”

The Creek’s Clear Note

Trash had tumbled beside the creek. Alannah put on gloves and used a grabber so she could clean safely. She kept litter away from the water and sorted each item. As the bank became clean, fish darted, ducks paddled, and a bright blue water-note began to sing.

A Second Chance for Things

In the recycling room, Alannah sorted clean paper, metal, glass, and plastic. The magical machine turned old materials into a notebook, a toy, and a watering can. “Some things can be used again instead of thrown away,” she said. A green note joined the song.

Every Drop Has a Job

The garden was thirsty, and a faucet was dripping. Alannah turned it off tightly and filled her watering can from a rain barrel. She poured water near the roots, where plants needed it most. The soil grew dark and healthy, and a turquoise water-drop note twirled into the air.

Homes That Grow

Alannah planted a young native tree and flowers for bees and butterflies. “Plants help clean the air,” she said. “They also give shade, food, and homes to living things.” Sprig tucked soil around the roots. Birds returned, and a golden-green note chimed among the blossoms.

Power Down, Bright Idea

At the learning center, empty rooms were glowing with unused lights. Alannah switched them off and unplugged an idle charger. Outside, sunlight and wind helped make cleaner energy. “Use only the energy you need,” she said. A sunny yellow note sparkled awake.

Many Hands Make a Melody

Alannah invited the neighborhood to help. Children and grown-ups planted flowers, repaired a birdhouse, swept paths, carried reusable bottles, and sorted cleanup bags. One good action became many. The care-notes swirled together into a bright rainbow melody.

Earth’s Song Returns

At sunset, the creek sparkled, gardens bloomed, and wildlife filled the air with happy sounds. The glowing Earth smiled above Alannah and Sprig. “You listened, learned, and cared,” Earth sang. Alannah held the tiny seed as it opened into a new plant. “Small choices can grow into big change!”

After the Story

Talk, remember, choose, and create!

1. Why did Alannah wear gloves and use a grabber near the creek?
2. Name two materials Alannah sorted for recycling.
3. How did Alannah save water in the garden?
4. How do trees and flowers help animals and people?
5. What are two ways you can save energy?

Make an Earth-care promise

Choose one caring action you can practice this week. Draw it or tell a grown-up your plan.

Sort and discover

With a grown-up, find one clean paper, metal, glass, or plastic item. Where should it go?
